The windup of the American League baseball season, so far as Washington is concerned, gave the fans the biggest run for their money they have had around these dignities for some time. The rejuvenated Nationals and the one-time American League champions gave as their first act in yesterday's melodrama one real base ball game, which lasted fifteen innings. So far as the second game of five brief rounds is concerned, the less said the better.

One Mr. Fritz, whom Connie Mack got from the Southern League, was placed on the slab to show up the Nationals, but he forced himself out of the game in the early part of the contest by giving two bases on balls and hitting Delahanty. Then there was much conversation with Connie Mack, the result being that Rube Waddell, the erstwhile actor, was put in to fill up the game. Mr. Waddell, who had been at Williamsport, Pa., during the summer at Connie's request, could get his wing back and get another run. The result was that Mr. Waddell, who had been at Williamsport, Pa., during the summer at Connie's request, could get his wing back and get another run. The result was that Mr. Waddell, who had been at Williamsport, Pa., during the summer at Connie's request, could get his wing back and get another run.

Such base ball as was shown by the Nationals in the first game would make this the biggest paying one on the circuit. Should Connie even turn the Washington team into a leader of the second division and give an article similar to that played yesterday the town wouldn't hold him.

The reception accorded Mr. Fritz of the New Orleans team was all right, but he never got the pitcher's chair. He lost control of the ball, two were passed and a third hit, and it was out Mr. Fritz.

Millan in the fourth dropped Murphy's fly after it was safely caught. The trouble with Mr. Millan is that he tries to field the ball. He has it in his hands. He'll be all right, however, with a little more coaching, and he'll get on the spring training trip.

Rube Waddell was with his antics again. He was coaching a J. Jennings, but a few fierce looks from Tommy Connolly soon shut up the Cubs. Scott's "Rube" Vickers—that's his name—appeared on the scene, and he proceeded to ruin any ambition the Cantillodites might have had for getting another run. He made Jones line to Harry Davis, and the latter threw Capt. Bob out at third before he could recover his equilibrium. Then Mr. Kahoe, formerly of the Cubs, sent a grounder to Mr. Collins—no relation to the Collins Jones, who threw him out to Davis. The second time the pitcher was called on to run on a hit by Davis and a wild pitch by Charlie Smith, and in the fourth added another to a hit, an error by Millan, another hit and a base on balls, but not a run. The Nationals came right back—and, by the way, this is the only inning they were able to do anything with Vickers' pitching—and on an error by Collins, Jones hit and another by T. Smith, they were able to tie the score.

Championship Ball Exhibited. From this time on Smith and Vickers pitched championship ball. Only once was either pitcher in a bad hole, and that was in the thirteenth, when Nichols got a hit and stole second, and Davis got to first on Charlie Smith's error. Then it was that Smith showed some real diplomacy. He passed Murphy, who was having a hard time, and he passed the bases were full, and Collins sent up a short fly to Ganley, who threw to Kahoe and caught Nichols sliding into the plate. And, by the way, there were a few caught at this fatal spot.

In the fourth Murphy tried to score on Fritz's grounder to Delahanty. In the fifth Jones tried to score from second on Smith's single. In the seventh Davis, after making a dash for home, was caught by Delahanty, and then there was the one just spoken of. This was great ball playing and brought the crowd to its feet each time.

Second Game a Farce.

The second game was as much of a farce as the first was legitimate. In the first inning Hartzel, the base ball midget, got his base on balls, and Nichols hit to Delahanty. The latter missed the ball, and instead of going after it, he started for Umpire Hurst, complaining that Topsy Hartzel had run into him, interfering with the play. The "Famous Little Man of Washington," as he was called, was arguing with him, and the ball was merely speeding to the outfield. Hartzel rushed home with the first run. When the dust had cleared away it was found that Big Bill Kay was guarding first, Charlie Jones on second, and Mr. Oberlin in right field. Quite a shake-up, but it pulled through the five innings in pretty good shape. Not an error by any one of them. Oberlin, by a splendid effort in the third inning, robbed Collins of a hit, but that was the only sensational incident of the game. Kay accepted all his chances at first, and Charlie Jones can now be called the "regular reliever." Score:
